I have reviewed all the information provided by you on the death of Mr. Truman and have no doubt based on my training and experience for the past 32 years as a board certified Forensic pathologist that the decedent hanged himself. I have performed hundreds of suicidal hangings, homicidal ligature strangulations and other hangings that come under the auto-erotic sexual asphyxia category over the long period that I have been a medical examiner.

Let us examine the social and medical history of the deceased:
He is a successful, highly educated young man who was prone to bouts of depression and was even prescribed anti-depressant medication.

There are 2 suicide notes in his handwriting addressing the good times he had that are very personal and intimate. Such events are only known to him.

Am I to postulate based on Dr. Adelstein's opinion that these notes are forged? This is not a robbery. There is nothing stolen from his place of residence.

Now let us look at the autopsy:

The autopsy is typical for that seen in a hanging suicide. The ligature and the subjacent ligature mark are consistent with each other. The dependent lividity on both the upper and lower extremities is what one sees in hanging. The "bruises" on the back of the hands is a result of dependent lividity and the subsequent postmortem passive oozing of blood out of the distended vessels giving that dusky hue to the skin and leading to the misinterpretation by Dr. Adelstein as resulting from trauma. There are no conjunctival petechiae nor are there petechiae around the eyes or on the face. It is very unusual to find petechiae in either site in suicidal hangings. There is no trauma to the body or in the head that is documented by the autopsy pathologist. The photographs taken at the autopsy document the lack of trauma other than that caused by the ligature mark. This is a well nourished young man and if this was a garroting or a homicidal strangulation he would have fought back and there would be evidence of a struggle which is not described by the pathologist who performed the autopsy.

There is not a single abrasion, contusion or laceration on the deceased face or body to suggest a physical altercation between him and any other party. There are no restraint injuries whatsoever. The ligature mark is classical for that seen in hangings and "dissecting" out the ligature mark to fit an opinion is not possible. The hyoid bone and thyroid cartilage are intact. The strap muscles of the neck have no hemorrhage. I have never seen ligature strangulation where there was no hemorrhage in the strap muscles or in the soft tissue of the neck. Oftentimes the hyoid bone and or the thyroid cartilage are fractured.

The toxicology does not reveal the presence of illegal drugs of abuse or abuse of prescription medication which theoretically could have incapacitated him rendering him incapable of a struggle.

As an embalmer whose job it is to prepare bodies for viewing the funeral director is in no position to render an expert opinion in this case. He has no specific education or experience or training in this highly specialized field and his opinion should not be expressed at the coroner's inquest.

If there are any other questions that I can address please forward them to me and I will assist in this matter.

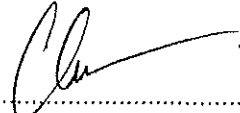

Thank you,
