1 I am the biological brother of Shane Truman Todd ("Shane").

2 I am commonly known as Dylan.

3 We are a unique family, bonded together by our love for each other and our respect for truth, honesty and integrity. The moment we heard that Shane had hung himself, I had a problem believing it. It was not until I remembered the concerns he had expressed to my parents about his life being in danger that I thought that my brother could have been murdered. When I heard that there was a suicide note, I thought to myself, "good", because I would know whether my brother wrote it or not. When I saw the note, I knew he did not write it.

4 While I said my final goodbyes to my brother at the mortuary for the last time, I rested my hand on his leg as my eyes were closed. By just feeling Shane's leg, I knew that that was his. I could determine that was him even without using my eyes – that was how well we knew each other. I am not only familiar with Shane physically, but I was also familiar with the way he expresses himself through his writing, and that is why I can say that my brother did not write those suicide notes.

5 When Shane was hard at work on his Ph.D in electrical engineering, I was in high school with no plans of going on to a 4-year university programme. Shane heard of my plans and told me that it was unacceptable. After hours of conversation, Shane persuaded me to do the work necessary to get into college. He would call me almost every night, no matter how busy he was, just to keep me focused on that goal. After reading the 2 lines of impersonal fluff that Shane had supposedly written, I knew that he had not written the suicide note. Shane had loved his brothers too much to write only such impersonal and meaningless sentences. There was no mention of my upcoming 21st birthday, nor any mention of past experiences we shared. Shane also did not provide any logical explanation of why he would kill himself.

6 The last time I was able to spend time with Shane was during the Christmas of 2011. I was fascinated when Shane told me about the different things that he was working on at his job. He told me about a current project, which required him to go to New Jersey to learn how to operate a multimillion dollar machine. He said that the machine is particularly useful if you have certain recipes to go along with it, and it allows you to do different things related to GaN. Shane also said that the company was not allowed to give the recipes directly, but he could look at them on his own and write down anything he wanted. I told him that this sounded "kind of shady", and he agreed, but adding "I guess that is how they do it". It seemed to me that Shane was following the protocol that was explained to him. It did not seem like it was his idea to copy the recipes.

7 We arrived at Shane's apartment after a meeting that my parents had with the Singapore police. My mother, Mary Todd said that the police had told her that Shane had set up a series of pulleys, which included screws in the marble walls of the toilet. I remember thinking to myself that he must have put a lot of work into researching how to hang himself. When we got to his apartment, the bathroom was the first place we looked. There were no pulleys, no ropes, and no holes in the walls. When IO Khaldun showed up with another police officer, my mother asked him where were the pulleys he had told her about. He had no answer. My mother was very upset and kept questioning IO Khaldun. I remember thinking if my mother was not managing her anger well, but decided that she was justified because IO Khaldun simply could not provide her with the answers she sought. IO Khaldun then suggested different ways in which Shane could have hung himself.

8 As we were gathering things in Shane's apartment, I noticed a hard disk drive that I had seen him use many different times. My parents had rediscovered this hard disk drive when they were sorting through the things we had collected from Shane's apartment. The reason why I could remember this particular hard disk drive is because this particular hard disk drive had two different male ends and I had always wondered why it was designed that way.
